VETERAN FOUND DEAD ON ROCKS

Believed to have fallen over a 300-foot cliff and dashed to his death on the rocks below, the body of a man identified as Milton Splane, 42, a World War veteran, was found near Pigeon point by two San Francisco fishermen Tuesday morning.

The body was discovered by Ragmas Hasselgren, of 1418 Twentieth street, and Herman Holmquist, of 2729 Fifteenth avenue, San Francisco, who were fishing off the point. They notified Constable S. A. Landini of Colma, who recovered the body from the rocks with the aid of 200 feet of cable. The body was badly mangled. Waves had thrown it against the rocks.

Splane was a stevedore and lived in a shack not far from tthe cliff. Constable Landini believes the man slipped and fell as he was walking along the edge of the cliff. Coroner J. C. McGovern was notified and the body was removed to a Daly City undertaking establishment.

Authorities have been attempting to locate relatives of the dead man. It is believed he was unmarried.

CARPENTER RISKS LIFE TO RESCUE LINEMAN

Risking his own life to save that of another was the heroic feat of a San Mateo carpenter Monday. Bernard J. Meehan, a P. G. & E. lineman, touched a 4,000 volt power wire while working atop a line pole in San Mateo. The wire burned a deep gash the full length of his arm, and he fell unconscious, and was held swinging in the air by his lifebelt.

Seeing the man slump, Otto J. Wirtz, a carpenter at work on a nearby building, rushed to the pole, and climbed to the assistance of the lineman. He held him securely until with the assistance of other linemen he could be brought to the ground.

Meehan was found to be badly burned, and was in a serious condition when sent to the Mills Memorial hospital. At the hospital physicians stated that they believed that the burned arm could be saved through a process of skin grafting.

On September 13 a party was given in honor of the third birthday of Barbara Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. McDonough, at their home, 419 Winchester street, Daly City. The sweetmeats and other goodies were unsurpassable and carried out the color scheme. Barbara Jean was the recipient of many beautiful gifts, which were admired by her little friends. The afternoon was made merry by the laughter and games of the children. Among those present were: Mrs. H. Fellows and sons Kenneth and William; Mrs. W. F. Scanlon and son, William, Jr.; Mrs. D. L. Werder, who points out that a person from a plane would have a view of practically the entire topography of the county and could readily detect a fire in the woods or mountains.

San Mateo county will have the first all-girls' flying club in the United States, according to plans announced by Miss Thyra Merrill, of Palo Alto. It is expected the club will have a membership of 25.

COUNTY TO FIGHT FOR WATER RIGHT

The county board of supervisors, meeting Monday in Redwood City, adopted a resolution of protest against the conversion of waters from San Fransisquito creek by Stanford university and from Bear gulch creek by the Bear Gulch Water Company. In addition, the board planned to take active part in protesting the granting of conversion rights by the state to either the university or water company.

John J. Garland appeared before the board and warned the members that unless some action was taken the university and water company planned to dam both creeks and convert all the water to their respective uses. Garland said the agricultural section and wells near the creeks in the southern end of the county faced a serious problem should the waters of the creeks be diverted.

Garland told the board that a large area depended upon these streams for their water supply and diversion would mean famine. He said the unversity wanted to divert the San Francisquito waters for the purpose of watering the golf links and grounds generally, while the water company wanted the Bear creek water to sell.

M. I. A. SOCIAL A SUCCESS

The Young Ladies' and Young Men's Improvement Associations held their opening social Wednesday evening at George Washington Masonic Temple. Those who attended deem it the best party yet held, and the officers in charge promise many more of its kind during the coming season. This organization provides leisure time activities in drama, public speaking, music, dancing and athletics. They firmly believe that young people must have recreation, and if they don't find it in "high places," they will in low places. So it is their aim to provide that high standard of recreation. They will meet every Wednesday evening at 7:30 at George Washington Masonic Hall, San Juan and San Jose avenues, and all are welcome.

MURDER TRIAL TO BE HELD LAST OF MONTH

The trial of Mrs. Minnie Roderick and Will Woodring, jointly charged with the murder of the former's husband, Frank Roderick, has been postponed until Tuesday, September 30. The postponement was made by order of Judge Buck with the consent to the attorneys on both sides. The trial was to have been begun on the 16th.

Mrs. Roderick and Woodring are alleged to have murdered Frank Roderick on his La Honda ranch on May 16, and to have buried his body in an abandoned well on the ranch.

MERCHANTS WIN UPHILL BATTLE

The Daly City Merchants' nine won their most impressive victory of the season last Sunday, defeating O'Brien, Spotorno & Mitchell, 7 to 5, on the Jefferson high school damond.

Fighting an uphill battle to overcome a four run lead amassed by the poultrymen, the local team rallied in the last three innings to win. The fact that several loyal rooters left the stands in the fifth frame, not desiring to watch the Daly City nine lose again, suggests that this sort of finish is something new.

Big Frank Jester, O'Brien's pitcher, had held the Merchants to four hits in five innings, and was enjoying a three run margin when Daly City suddenly came to life, tying the count in the sixth stanza. They put across the winning run in the following inning, and added a tally in the eighth for good measure.

The local batters bunched eight of their ten hits in the last four innings to completely rout Jester. Ray Doyle garnered three singles in four times at bat to lead the attack. Toole, Plansky, Strand and Cruchoff also contributed to the Merchants' success with timely bingles.

Gene Keagle started on the mound for Daly City and finished only after he had lost and regained his poise several times. Gene went through six hectic innings, displaying wildness that threatened retirement, but he finished strong, allowing nary a hit in the last three frames.

The poultrymen scored the initial run of the game in the second inning. Trowbridge crossed the local battery up with a bunt, there being two out at the time. Jester obtained a base on balls, Tilton singled to left, filling the bases, and Rossi walked to force in a run. Dutcher then ended the inning with an easy roller to Rettig.

Two more Sportono batters crossed the plate in the following frame, after Keagle had struck out the first pair of would-be hitters. A single, double and an infield error accounted for the damage.

Pat Sloan put the Merchants in the run column by stealing home in the fourth inning, and Fred Strand repeated the feat in the Merchants' next time at bat. The visitors retaliated with a run in their half of each stanza.

Doyle opened the eventful sixth with a single. Sloan and Staglich were hit by pitched balls to load the bags, and Toole scored them with his only hit of the day. Staglich brought in the tying run later on Strand's sacrifice fly.

Two singles and a sacrifice bunt in each of the following innings gave Daly City the winning margin..

Manager Ed Cavagnaro attended a meeting of most of the Class A teams in San Francsco, Wednesday. The A. G. Spalding Company is planning a winter league that starts October 5, which the Daly City Merchants' nine will probably enter.

THREE ARE HELD ON MURDER CHARGE

Held under formal murder charges, John Cusack, 22; Paul Mangarene, 24; and Mrs. Josephine Mitchell, 18, await their preliminary hearing, set for September 25, for the alleged slaying of Giovanni Marcelli, 72, "hermit of Visitacion valley."

Mangarene, a taxi driver, said by police to have confessed and implicated Cusack and Mrs. Mitchell, later protested his innocence.

Cusack, a boxer, declared he was in Sacramento at the time the aged man was beaten to death.

Marcelli died two weeks ago, after he had been found in his shack unconscious. He accused two men and a girl of having attacked him when he refused to give them money.

HEALTH WORKERS TO BE RETAINED

Officially notified by the United States Public Health Service that the services of five inspectors employed by the department in squirrel eradication work in San Mateo county for the past ten years, will have to be suspended for at least a year on account of lack of funds, the San Mateo county board of supervisors took steps at their meeting last Monday to continue the services of two of the men under the supervision of W. J. Graef, who has been in charge of the work here. The county has each year appropriated $240 a month to cover the traveling expenses of the five inspectors and Chief Graef. The money will now be used in paying the salaries of the two deputies until funds are again available from the United States Public Health Service in carrying on the work, Assistant District Attorney Edmind Scott advised the board that this could be legally done. The selection of the men to act as his deputies will be left to Graef, the board decided. The motion to make the appropriation was made by Suervisor Hickey and seconded by Supervisor Brown. Communications were received from Burleigh Murray of Belmont and several other persons recommending that Allen R. Allbright be maintained as one of the inspectors.

The board adopted a resolution, on motion of Supervisors Hickey and Francis, protesting the impounding of additional water by the Bear Gulch Water Company at the headwaters of the San Fransisquito creek, if it can be shown that such impounding is affecting the underground water sources of the south end of the county. The board's attention to this matter was called by John J. Garland, who resides near Menlo Park, who explained that the water that will be appropriated by the company formerly flowed down the Francisquito creek and that a certain percentage of it found its way into the ground and helped maintain the well supply of the surrounding country. The protest of the supervisors will be filed with the Department of Public Works, Division of Water Resources, at Sacramento.

An application for the position of State Traffic Officer in San Mateo county was received from Frank Folsom, of Menlo Park, and was ordered filed.

Harry L. Robb, of Millbrae, was reappointed a member of the Three Cities Mosquito Abatement District, on motion of Supervisors Brown and Francis.

The hearing in the matter of the proposed formation of the Half Moon Bay police protection district was continued on Tuesday, September 30, when the board meets in special session.

WOMAN TRIES TO END LIFE BENEATH TRAIN

Miss Mildred F. Kennedy, 32, was being held by the San Mateo county authorities at the Community Hospital at Beresford, following her atempt Friday to take her life by throwing herself under a Southern Pacific train.

Engineer S. D. Stimson brought his train to a stop near the Oak Grove crossing in Burlingame. According to police, she admitted that she had recently been dischargeed from the Agnew State Hospital for the Insane.

THE COLMA HOME CLUB WILL MEET ON TUESDAY

The Ladies' Home Club of Colma and vicinity will meet next Tuesday at 2 P. M., at the Community Center in Colma. Owing to the absence of the President, Mrs. Stella Jensen, who is traveling in the East, and the vacation of Mrs. Lillian Landini, first Vice-President, the Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. W. H. Clay, will preside. The club will convene after three months vacation, before which it was federated with the State of California and the San Mateo County Federation of Women's Clubs.

OUTRUNS SPEED COP, BUT LOSES OWN LIFE

George Wilson, Hollywood musician, is dead, his car a wreck, because he attempted to speed away without lights from two traffic officers who were pursuing him.

Officers George Walesberg and Lewis Rinkel found his body and the broken machine at the foot of an eight-foot embankment between San Bruno and Tanforan after they had given up the chase and turned back.

ASSERTS READING IS KEY TO SUCCESS

The man of culture is the man who reads. He is just as particular about what he reads as what he eats. He who reads the most has the widest horizon. It is impossible to learn very much in one short life-time without reading, but the reading man can enter into the minds and lives of many people, vicariously experiencing their dangers and romances, learning their viewpoints and reactions, until he has a wide and deep knowledge of human nature. He learns the lessons that history teaches, he explores the world through books of travel, and through the study of science he sees the workings of the immutable law of cause and effect. He studies the various religions that have been the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night to the nations of the earth, and he knows something of their cumulative influence of the world today. He can trace the beginnings of art in its many forms, and its development through the ages.

A man may be a physical invalid, bound to a wheel chair, and yet, through reading he can explore the Universe, going back in imagination to the Dawn of Creation, and bravely forward, up to the very door of the Millenium.

A man whose schooling has been cut short can continue his studies through reading and become a learned man. Books are the storehouse of the world's knowledge, and reading is the key. He who likes to read travels a delightful road to success.

No program of reading is complete that does not include several periodicals. No man or woman can keep abreast with current progress, local, national and international events who neglects the newspapers and magazines.

He who learns wisdom from his own experiences is an intelligent man, but he who avails himself of the experiences of others through reading, is on the high road to success. He has guide-posts all along the way, and does not have to break out a laborious trail through unknown country. Constructive reading is the shortest road to success.

An interesting page in this paper endorsed by our community leaders outlines the value of reading and what our standard as a community should be.

SERVICES NEXT SUNDAY AT CALVARY BAPTIST CHAPEL

Rev. Charles Woessner, pastor of Calvary Baptist Chapel, 5724 Mission street, announces that next Sunday morning Mr. Adrian Waldo Sasha will occupy the pulpit. Mr. Sasha is a converted Hebrew; a native of Russia, and brings a unique message of the highest importance to the present life. His subject for the morning will be, "How an Unconverted Jew Sees Christianity."

Probably the greatest quest today is the pursuit of happiness; but alas it is not happiness the world seeks—it is mirth. Mirth is like a flash of lightning; it is short and transient, while true happiness is fixed and permanent. The lightning flash glitters only for a moment as it breaks through a gloom of clouds, while true happiness keeps up a kind of daylight in the mind, and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity. How true is the quotation, "'Tis to be happy that we run after pleasures. But we, alas, mistake our happiness and foolishly seek it where it is not to be found; as silly children think to catch the sun when they see it setting at so near a distance. They travel on and tire themselves in vain; for the thing they seek is another world."

Sunday evening at the 8 o'clock hour the pastor will speak on "How to Become Truly Happy." You who have never been truly happy will want to hear this message.

Promptly at 9:15 A. M. the church school will view the reel of motion picture entitled, "American Ideals." Miss Vivian Kees, a student in the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, will then give a short devotional. The reels to be shown at 6:30 P. M. will be two reels on "The Story of Leather." Also a reel dealing with the life of Abraham Lincoln. We will see a log cabin such as Lincoln was born in; Lincoln and his mother; Sarah, Abe's sister; Abe as a boy; as a youth; the White House; Lincoln memorial. Every parent in Daly City should see that their children see the life of this great man portrayed on the screen.

Mrs. Agnes Anderson, of Evergreen avenue, who was chairlady of the P. T. A. whist given by the General Pershing P. T. A. last Wednesday afternoon in the school building, wishes to thank all of the members and her many friends who helped in any way to make this affair such a success.

With drawn guns, two unmasked bandits entered Joe's pool parlor at San Bruno, about noon Monday, and after holding up the three men in the place and tapping the cash register, escaped with approximately $300.

Fire destroyed Federal Trade Commission's investigation records. Now for an investigation.

SIDELIGHTS

It is unfortunate to lose a limb but fortunate that it can not be lost more than once, as James Bath of Bangor, Me., can testify. Desiring to cross a railroad track, he misjudged the speed of a passenger train which threw him for no gain and neatly clipped off the end of his wooden leg.

The story of how a young Scotch doctor confounded some early clergymen is again "going the rounds of the press." The preachers protested against the then newly discovered means of anesthesia, saying that the Lord would not have caused men to suffer if it had not pleased him. But the doctor pointed out that the Lord "caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam" before taking out his rib. The clergymen were obliged to admit that such high authority for anesthetics could not be disputed.

Although propaganda is in ill repute, Erskine Ramsay, a Birmingham capitalist, is willing to brazenly indulge in and pay for it. He offers $500 to anyone who can put over a change in table manners which will permit one to cut lettuce with a knife instead of trying to mash it with a fork.

While the Secretary of State is the ranking officer in the President's cabinet, Secretary Stimson at times is theoretically subordinate to Secretary of War Hurley. Mr. Stimson is a brigadier-general of the Officers' Reserve Corps, so when he is on duty in that capacity the Secretary of War is his superior.

After the Federal Trade Commission had spent several years in nosing into the business of various industries, its building in Washington burned and a large quantity of its investigation records went up in smoke. So far as the public is concerned, the loss is perhaps not of much consequence, unless the work is to be done all over again at the expense of the taxpayers.

The high praise given Coste and Bellonte, the brave French flyers, for their flight from Paris to New York, the first from the continent of Europe to America, is entirely deserved. But no one has yet duplicated Lindbergh's feat of flying alone across the Atlantic. Until someone else does that trick, the Lone Eagle will occupy a place all his own in the field of aviation.

KEEP UP ADVERTISING

R. H. Ballard, President of the Southern California Edison Company, Los Angeles, says:

"More new business is what we need and not so much talk of depression. Spend the money for new business campaigns and new advertising and the results will be surprising. The people have the money and will buy goods, I believe, if somebody has the courage to sell them the buying idea."

He pointed to increases in savings deposits, gains in new life insurance in force, and increased buying of bonds as evidence of the ability of consumers to buy goods if they so desired. Affected, however, by the pessimistic drift of national comment, the public is reluctant to buy, and consequently is building up a most tremendous backlog of purchasing power.

This backlog should and can be tapped, declared Mr. Ballard, if the American business men snap out of an apathetic state of mind and employ redoubled efforts to produce new business. This is not the time, in his opinion, to lay off salesmen and cut advertising appropriations.

ROADS AND POPULATION

Good roads are so necessary to modern life that people will change their place of abode to get them.

The new census figures for four Southern states show that the only one of them to do any extensive road building in the past decade increased her population 24 per cent. The others gained only about 3 per cent.

An adequate mileage of paved highways is as necessary to progress as railroad or electric service. Congestion on main highways has become a big problem in many states.

New roads render invaluable service to the people. This is especially true in rural localities. We can not have farm prosperity until farms are connected with the markets and the outside world by surfaced, year-round roads. Motoriaztion of agriculture is as essential as motorization of industry.

It is safe to say that the states which are now undertaking extensive road developments will be the prosperous, progressive and growing sections of the future, providing their road building expenditures are made along scientific and busines-like lines.

A Missouri traveling salesman saved all the dimes that were given him in change for 20 years and used them to finance a world tour.

The residents of a "beggar's home" in Nanking, China, are taught such trades as carpentry and printing until they are able to make a living.

THE SAN MATEO COUNTY FALL FLOWER FESTIVAL

The committee in charge of the San Mateo County Fall Flower Festival to be held in the Junior College gymnasium, San Mateo, October 24, 25 and 26, under the auspices of the Burlingame, San Mateo Garden and Flower Club and the Peninsula Gardeners' Association, has announced the following special committees:

NEW TRAIL OPENED TO TOP OF U. S. A.

The new $25,000 foot and horseback trail to the summit of Mt. Whitney, elevation 14,496 feet, the highest point in continental United States, was officially dedicated to public use on September 5, by officers of the United States Forest Service and National Park Service. A party of more than fifty people traveled to the peak to witness the unveiling of a tablet commemorating the opening of the trail.

The Mt. Whitney trail starts at the mouth of Lone Pine Canyon near Lone Pine in the Owens valley, and runs for some twelve miles through the Inyo National Forest to the summit of the Sierra Nevada, where it crosses into the Sequoia National Park and continues for several miles to the top of Mt. Whitney. Easy grades and a wide tread make it possible to travel the new trail in comfort and safety. The trip from Lone Pine to Mt. Whitney and back can be easily made on horesback in one and a half days.

free wheeling

MOTORDOM'S biggest surprise in 1930 is Studebaker's introduction of Free Wheeling with positive gear control.

Today's biggest surprise is the unexpected application of Free Wheeling to the one Studebaker Eight that seemed too low-priced to command it.

Free Wheeling, with positive gear control . . . until now obtainable only in the President and Commander Eights . . . is today offered in a new Dictator Eight at a new low price!

Now, with greater power and exquisite new beauty, the Dictator Eight is more than ever first of all Eights at its price. And it tops the great records it has piled up for economy of operation with the super-economy of Free Wheeling.

Free Wheeling means the harnessing of momentum and the consequent saving of 12% to 20% in gas and oil consumption. Free Wheeling delivers five miles and charges for four . . . your engine has "worked" only 8,000 miles when it has travelled 10,000 miles. Chassis wear is reduced. Tire life is lengthened.

You can shift from high to second, back and forth, at 40—50 miles an hour and never touch the clutch. Yet, with Free Wheeling, under positive gear control, the braking power of your engine is always available—so surely and instantaneously that Public Safety Commissioners have pronounced it a distinct contribution to safety.

See this new Dictator Eight, shown today for the first time. Drive it. Experience the thrill of Free Wheeling. Studebaker considers this new Eight with Free Wheeling a crowning triumph of its 78 progressive years.

The desire to wound him filled her with a burning fever. At least then he would not be able to go for weeks without remembering her. He would think of her. His attention, his desire would be hers. For an intolerable moment she yielded to the pain of this desire, then rose, wrapped her faded cotton kimono over her bathing suit and turned to face Loring. For a moment she was struck with a bright memory. His composure, his self-assurance were broken by the upthrust of some powerful emotion. She was a girl again, at her mother's house, running up the front steps, he stood at the top in her way, looking at her eagerly, his face so—alive, disturbing.

They stared at each other, remembering, caught and held together. But Ernestine thrust this clamoring thought away from her. This man was Lillian's husband. This was Jonathan Hamilton's son, her father's son-in-law and adviser. He was one of her own people.

"You haven't been kind to Will, any of you," she stammered, trying to bring the talk back to commonplace.

"He hasn't accepted our kindness," Loring answered slowly.

"It isn't only that he's proud," said Ernestine. "He's vain as well. He's different. He's entitled to his vanity."

"At any cost?" asked Loring in a low voice. "I think there are men who would consider pride too dear—for your happiness."

Ernestine's thoughts were in confusion. Loring's words came back to her, nothing but poverty and childbearing and distress. Oh, she had had more than that from Will. She had had life! But was there to be for her no permanent peace and security with Will? She doubted it. And this doubt brought another: Has my whole instinct concerning Will been false? Is the family's judgment of him correct and my own mistaken? They think him erratic, trivial, unsteady, a failure—O God in Heaven, help me—

She turned away from Loring and took the path up through the shrubs toward the lawn about the house. She stumbled along as though to get away from the weakness, the tears, the fearful doubts that assailed her.

A motor had been humming along the lake road as she advanced from the water's edge, and now abruptly the car had entered the inlet road and swung about before the house. At this instant when she became conscious of it and its arrival, the air was still filled with the grinding of brakes, while the doors of the car spilled open and it disgorged three of four men who were carrying others. One of the two men lifted from the car was either dead or dying, for a thin bright stream ran from him as they laid him on the grass.

Bright red dripped from the running board. The other man was being carried indoors, while two tied their coats together to make a stretcher for the first man lifted out. A shout brought Madame Pastano from the house. The gardener, the houseman appeared on the run.

The whole household was instantly concentrated with skilled, practiced efficiency, so quiet, so quick that Ernestine was still gaping while it was all accomplished. The hose was running furiously across the lawn. The rug was brought from the floor of the car, and thrown into the lake, with rocks on top of it. The gardener put the hose inside the car and washed the floor and the running board. Another came from the garage with a different car rug, with a different license plate which he changed in a moment, and the driver of the car moved it up a little, so that the gravel could be picked up in a shovel, and carried and thrown into the lake, the fresh spot raked together.

Now old Grandmother Pastano, an ancient dame who spoke not a word of English, came from the porch, her head wrapped in a shawl, and got into the car and sat by the window, her thick jeweled hand resting on the edge of the glass. The car turned about and, with a different driver, moved sedately back along the lake road, whence it had come—as innocent appearing a vehicle as ever rode the highway.

No one had noticed her, there at the end of the lake walk, among the carefully cut shrubs. Ernestine moved back and came to the little summer house and sat down in it, for her limbs would carry her no farther.

The dreadful efficiencies of the Pastanos had all this time increased her wrath with Will. She could not bear it for him to be in a daze, to go about with the air which had exasperated Lillian the night Elaine was born—helpless, hopeless and confused. She couldn't stand the thought that he was a failure while these foreigners were thick with success.

Ruby Pastano had power. He loved money. He had it. He was dramatic and generous with it. He wanted it to show. He loved to empty his pockets—knowing well where he might refill them. And all summer she had compared this man's magic with Will's fumbling. Deliberately she had shut her ears against stories of political corruption, against tales of graft and bribery, of Ruby Pastano who was generous with policemen. Growing strong and well again, with the children blooming under the benevolence of this man whose kindness had been more acceptable to her than the kindness of her own people, because he was Will's friend and they were not, she had nevertheless been influenced to vexation beyond measure that Pastano should be so capable and Will so futile.

Now her tears fell from her eyes in great scalding drops.

What was she, Ernestine Briceland, doing in this band of cutthroats and thieves? All of Ruby Pastano's efficiency was to her nothing now but filthy rags. All her relationship with him and his family, from the beginning, had been built on misunderstanding. They were too far apart. Not even affection and liking, not even respect could bridge the gap, the difference in ideals, in standards, in purposes. This generous, unscrupulous man, bringing the victims of rapine so unfalteringly into the heart of his own home was Will's friend—not hers. She had nothing in common with these people, and she would never have. And she had shut the door of her heart against her own flesh and blood, because of Will's pride, and had opened it to these—these— She choked and her throat turned bitter with gall at them.

Abruptly she was conscious of an upsurging of patriotism. Her own people—her own kind! Americans, strong, decent, successful, ardent and clean. Kind—kind. Incapable of murder and plotting. These foreigners looked upon them all as fat geese to be plucked and did not understand the courage, the cleanness, the strength of kindness. She hated them with a furious hatred. The compulsion to be rid of them—of all of them, and Will as well—came upon her.

She was crying terribly. She ran back down the beach path and came to Loring playing in the water with Elaine and Peter.

"Get the boat," she said sobbingly, "I will go with you."

* * * * * * *

It was wonderful to relax in the comfort and security of home again. The children went off happily with old Annie, who had cared for Lillian and Ernestine when they were small, and who had always stayed with mamma, a privileged member of the household. Lillian scarcely left Ernestine's side a moment.

Papa planned softly about going into Chicago in the morning, to set through to a finish the details of the trust funds for his two girls. Loring kept his distance, reading and smoking by the table at the far end of the long porch.

Ernestine was almost asleep, relaxed and comfortable in her body for the first time in many weeks, and she was almost inattentive to papa's voice going gently on with plans.

"I will deed the Sheridan road house over to you, darling. Mamma and I will be in New York most of the time, but when we are in Chicago we will stay there with you. Loring told us that you would come back sooner if I withheld your settlement."

Something clicked in Ernestine's mind—a small sound, as though a lock had been unbolted. But she went on to sleep calmly enough, carrying down with her into unconsciousness her trouble and her pain. Loring said she would come back—papa had been so willing to obey her wish about not having her money, because Loring said she would come back the sooner.

She slept deeply, all through the long evening, all through the night. It was the first clear flush of dawn when she awoke, sat up under the light cover that mamma had thrown over her there on the porch swing and looked out across the water.

She awoke with a conviction. She could not do this. She could not leave Will. It was impossible. By what route she had come to this conclusion she could not have told. But in her sleep her true nature had asserted itself and her mind was fixed.

She had done what she had resolved never to do. She had denied her marriage.

"Oh, not I—not my true self—not my heart!" she whispered. "I never did deny Will nor my love. I'll go back today—to be his wife for ever—no matter what comes."

She felt calm and strong now and could look with impersonal horror upon her defection. In the clear light of morning, filled as she was with the conviction that she must for ever choose Will against all the world, further understanding came to her.

All these months that she had been hating Will and loving him and reviling him and saying such cruel things, it had been a deep unknown desire for her mother's home which goaded her. It had been rebellion against the continued humiliation of poverty and disappointment that their hopes and plans had not matured this time into success.

All her mental processes seemed loosened, open. Now from some canny instinct she was presented with a new enlightenment. She was—she had been—worse than the "gimme" women. She had been for months under the domination of a bitter jealousy of his work. She had been wounded because his activity was secret from her. She had loathed the mistress that he followed—his own career. So, wanting him to succeed and to earn money, she had not wanted him possessed with the preoccupation of such processes. She had seen in his gaze that inward adoration which is more obnoxious to a woman's greedy pride than another woman's lure can ever be—that love for what he was doing, that excluded interest in his own mind.

All her own mind clear at last in the limpid humility born of having failed Will, in intention, if not in conclusive act, she could reach a place on which to plant her feet for ever, as far as he and she were concerned.

"What have I to do with his work?" The answer to this question in the clear logic of her mind released her for ever from the petty jealousies of the artist's wife. The answer was "Nothing." She had nothing to do with his work at all. It was his own, and she must know it. The old unity she had wanted to preserve was possible only as a kind of over-unity, not going into details. It was the ground on which love placed its feet, the sky above love's head, but not the secret of the habitations of the soul.

He could not bear a child for her, though his love conceived it. And was not the business of bringing forth something new and bright, even if it were but a comic strip for the daily papers, as secret and silent a process as that in which she was now again engaged? They all knew she was to bear another child. But no one intruded upon her privacy save by the most discreet and apologetic kindness. And might not the creative processes of artistry be as secret, as involuntary?

She had been resentful as petty men were sometimes resentful of a woman's preoccupation and distress in maternity. Will had been natural with her, casual and kind, and she could accord him the same courtesy. She wept afresh, but not the dreadful scalding tears of the day before. These were unselfish thanking tears distilled from a heart grown calm and good again.

"O God, help me to be a good wife—help me to be a good wife to Will, O God. Help me to understand him, to grow and change when life demands it of me. Help me to be a good wife."

She went to the desk in the corner and wrote a telegram:

"I have left Pastano's, and am at mamma's cottage with the children. Please come and get us today.—Ernestine."

She wakened old Annie, gave her money and sent her over to the hotel with the message.

* * * * * * *

They had a long talk on the beach that afternoon. Ernestine told Will everything, all that she had thought and felt, all that had happened the day before—Loring's talk with her, the murder car at Pastano's, her revulsion of feeling, how she had come home, and how, in the night, while she slept, everything had straightened out for her. Will lay beside her in silence, her hand in his, and again and again as she talked her fingers were pressed against his lips. They were back again in the cradle of love—rocked in magic which overcame all difficulties and healed all misunderstandings.

He told her then about himself and about what he had been through.

"I've made ten or eleven different developments of Poole's cartoon, altering them all, and I've made each one up for about six weeks, and planned the continuity out beyond that time, but I can't sell them. When I sat down to write to you what was there to say? I would resolve to try again, hoping to have some wonderful news for you. I've not been eating or sleeping—I missed you so, and I repented so my selfishness with you, and my attitude toward your family. I've not been reasonable, or fair—or generous. I felt that you were slipping away from me, because I couldn't hold you—because I didn't rate you."

These pictures moved Ernestine profoundly. Weeks of work, and nothing sold. The fear of losing her and the children, and the need to stick at the thing he was trying to do until he did it. She could feel in him a sharp pain of restlessness and discouragement, and her love poured out on him.

"Darling—it doesn't matter. I can stay here with mamma all summer. She understands. I can stay here until you get your comic strip right. They understand that it's you and I together always, Will."

"Don't cry, darling."

"It doesn't mean a thing," she told him and added with some whimsicality, "it's my condition, darling. I am simply weepy, and when I think how near I came to doing something that would have ruined all my life and yours—"

"You couldn't—you didn't—not even nearly, Ernestine."

Peter had come up to them, and, seeing his mother's tears, he began to wail loudly, and Elaine crowded close and thrust out a trembling lip. Will drew their attention from Ernestine, and gravely, abstractedly, he began to amuse them. He marked out the old familiar squares.

"Make a cat, Daddy—make a cat," commanded Peter, and Will, listening to Ernestine, but only half attentive, began to put down the cats that Peter loved so, the squares for a drawing board, a bit of stick for a pencil, the firm wet sand making a good plaque.

The child screamed with joyous mirth, and Elaine, beside him, clapped her hands with delight.

"Tabby cat's got his head stuck in a tin can. Look, Mamma!"

Will's attention swerved from Ernestine. He sat staring at what he had drawn, as though at a stranger's work. His face wore a startled look. The small squares, in which two ridiculous cats went through a ridiculous adventure. Suddenly he leaped to his feet and gave a whoop which a Comanche Indian might have envied.

"Don't worry—our fortune is made. Can't you see—there it is. Not Mr. Poole's old comic strip in any way, shape or form, but my own darned old cats? Even the children can see it. Trust me a few days longer."

The cats were a great success. When fall came Will was working on the Sun again, in Mr. Poole's old office, under a three-year contract. The cat drawings were valued at sixty dollars a strip the first year, and more the second and third. Six days a week at sixty dollars a day. A full page for the Sunday supplement, in colors, at a special price. The tide of money and prestige poured in on them in a startling way. The movie people made attractive offers. Will knew how to make animated movies.

The Todds moved into a Colonial home only about a mile from mamma's. They had rented the house "to see how they liked it" with the possibility of buying it in their minds. Will offered the West side house in on a trade, but Ernestine would not sell the little house.

"You never can tell," she insisted, and though Will laughed at this, he did not resist her tenderness toward the house.

Papa established the trust funds. Money poured in upon them in the ridiculous and unreasonable way in which money behaves. It seemed now that nothing was too nice for the Todds. The new baby was born under the most promising conditions, in the Colonial room in the modern and beautiful home. A boy, long limbed and with a pointed face, like Will's.

Lillian was with Ernestine every day, and Ernestine noticed for the first time that Lillian's beauty was fading. She hung over the new baby, she was gentle with Peter and Elaine, who visited their mother at every possible moment. Once when the two had been watching the nurse bathe the newcomer and wrap him deftly in binder and cloth, turning him about in her hands while he gave soft grunts and sighs of satisfaction, and then at last tucked him in snowy flannelette into the curve of Ernestine's arm, with a little spank and tender scolding, Lillian looked at Ernestine with tears in her eyes.

"I wish," she said, "that it had been this baby's birth that Loring knew about." Her voice trailed away and Ernestine tingled with a sense of guilt. So that was why Lillian had no children!

"It's hard for people who haven't children to understand how quickly all the woes of bearing them are forgotten. I never think of that old time any more, and I'm sure Will doesn't. Anyhow—if it had been worse, don't you think Elaine was worth it?"

"Yes," said Lillian, "of course she is. But it was a dreadful time, Ernestine. I don't believe you have ever known how near you came to dying. It was a terrible time for all of us."

"After all," smiled the younger sister, "in such a case an inch is as good as a mile. That whole dark time—it was all so wrong, apparently, for me to have that second baby, and now wild horses couldn't tear her from us. You can't always plan things out."

Later, Will came in, and found Ernestine alone.

"Remember that murder car you saw at Pastano's last summer?"

"Of course. I'll never forget it."

"Well, the new district attorney has arrested six of Pastano's relatives. It seems those men were killed in a fight with another bunch of gangsters. But these fellows were Pastano's men, and the next night they got the others with a machine gun, and now they're all locked up—both gangs. Loring has undertaken to get bail for them and get them off. Of course, it's quite respectable in Chicago to defend the most notorious criminal before the bar, but mamma doesn't like this. It was too close to home."

Ernestine could not help but smile at the twist Will could give to that word "mamma." Yet strangely, her mother and her husband had arrived at a basis of mutual understanding and liking since Will had been making his comic strip. Will said mamma was right about things. "Of course she wanted her daughter to marry a good provider," exclaimed Will, "just as you will want Elaine to marry a man who can take care of her. Mamma Briceland is too good a mother to be satisfied with less. And besides, she's pragmatic. She's got something to be proud of now, and delighted to have it. I tell you, Ernestine, I think Loring has worn it a bit thin, with his greediness and bossiness and always reminding them that he made papa rich."

Ernestine wondered if she would want Elaine to marry a good provider, and suddenly she felt in her heart a strong loyalty to the difficulties that had beset their ways.

"I don't care whether the children are rich or poor," she told Will. "But I want them to love and suffer, and to have hardships—I want them to live—and value life. I do, Will. I don't want it to be easy for them. Having things too easy is one form of poverty when you think about it."

Small Girl's Positive Definition Is Good One

"Isn't that lovely?" said grandma to a three-year-old. "Yes," assented the minute granddaughter, "it's grandiful." Why not? The word is as good a hybrid as a thousand that have butted their way into the dictionary, and it gives full value, combining, as it does, the concepts of beauty and of grandeur. I think it is worth keeping.

So are some of the definitions invented by the same embryonic lexicographer. "A man and a boy was there," she was declaring; "not two men, just a man and a boy." Not quite convinced, her aunt inquired, "What is the difference between a man and a boy?" "Men spank boys," was the prompt and positive answer. How useless it is to deny that our whole Weltanschauung is based on social distinctions! Are all men born free and equal? Possibly; but they remain in that grandiful state of equality only as long as they are unspankable. Once the age of spankability sets in, society splits into two strata, the spankers and the spankees, and remains thus cleft.—Charles Hall Grandgent, in "The New Word."

A Balfour Anecdote

An amusing anecdote is recalled about Lord Balfour and Lady Oxford concerning her rather sensational "Autobiography of Margot Asquith."

In it she speaks of him in a not too kind manner.

Meeting him shortly after its publication, she said, "I do hope you will forgive me for what I said about you in my book." Lord Balfour answered, "What book? I did not know you had written one."—Weekly Scotsman.

Burial at Arlington

The secretary of war has the power to authorize the burial of a woman beside her husband in a separate grave in Arlington National cemetery provided the husband was a commissioned officer. In the case of enlisted men, if a widow desires to be buried with her husband arrangements must be made with the War department to have the grave made deep enough so that a second casket can be placed upon that of the soldier; in other words, the soldier and his widow must be buried in the same grave. There would be no question that a former President of the United States, who was technically commander-in-chief of the army and navy, would be regarded as a commissioned officer, although actually President Taft was a civilian who never held a commission.

Umbrellas Via Slot Machine

Forgetful people of Berlin, Germany, no longer have fear of getting caught in the rain while their umbrellas are somewhere else. By dropping the equivalent of 15 cents into a slot machine they get a folding emergency umbrella composed of a hood of oiled paper and a handle of wood.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Andrews, residing near Turlock, also own two twin fawns, who claim as their pal, Peg, a part collie, whose protective instinct keeps strangers from interfering with the twins at feeding time. Death of the mother forced Mr. and Mrs. Andrews to raise the animals by hand, and their work is much simplified with Peg as guardian and playmate.

AN ARCTIC TRAGEDY

After 33 years, a mystery of the Arctic has been partially cleared up by the finding of the remains of Salomon A. Andree and one of his companions on an uninhabited island in the far North. Some equipment and records were also found frozen in the ice.

Andree was a distinguished Swedish aeronaut and engineer, who had made several notable balloon flights before he set out on his fatal expedition at the age of 42. With two companions, Nils Strindberg and Knut Fraenkel, he ascended in a balloon from Danes' Island on July 11, 1887, with the idea of drifting over the North Pole. It was hoped to later reach Alaska or some other land, whence they might make their way home.

Two days after their departure a message brought back by a carrier pigeon indicated that they were being carried far off their intended course by unfavorable winds. Nothing more was ever heard of the brave adventurers until their remains were found a few days ago.

The Andree undertaking was hazardous, even foolhardy. Under the most favorable weather conditions the chances were overwhelmingly against its success, as the participants well knew before they set out. The lure of adventure claimed them as its victims, as it has claimed many of the world's bravest in all ages.

EDUCATION AND THE RADIO

Radio, in the United States, has become one of the greatest forms of entertainment. Still an "infant industry," it shows vast potentialities for future achievements. Among these, it is hoped, will be its development as a force in education.

"There are nearly 600 radio stations in this country," says John W. Elwood Vice-president, of the National Broadcasting Company, in a fascinating address on "Radio and the Three R's," "and a relatively small percentage of the total time on the air is devoted to education, per se. It is estimated that the people of America spend 100 million listener-hours per day at their radio sets. That is a huge total. I believe education should share largely in it. It seems to me that educators should try to take advantage of all existing facilities-as many hours as possible on the entire radio structure of the country."

Mr. Elwood points out that radio can give life and color to lessons in history, geography and the like. The motion picture has brought dozens of historical characters and incidents to life, by presenting them to the eye. The radio, picturing them through the spoken word, can do likewse.

Co-operation between educators and the radio industry is necessary to the advancement of such a program. That will eventually be attained. A new and vast field is open to those who would spread knowledge throughout the world.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

The National Board of Fire Underwriters reports that the fire loss during July was $34,847,750, or $2,862,257 more than in July, 1929. The total loss for the first seven months of this year has been $277,187,521, as compared with $262,078,288 during the same period last year, an increase of more than $15,000,000.

The discouraging fact is that we are once more on our way toward a half-billion dollar annual waste. For the past few years there has been a small but steady decrease in annual loss and it was hoped that the American people were at last becoming "fire conscious." Apparently the hope was unfoundde. Carelessness and ignorance continue to destroy, through the medium of fire, thousands of irreplaceable lives and a gigantic amount of property each year.

The week of October 5-11 has been set aside as "Fire Prevention Week." Once more private and public organizations will endeavor to instill in the public a knowledge of fire hazards, of the need for better building construction and the like. Once more we will have the opportunity to learn, under expert guidance, lessons that are of direct financial benefit to all of us.

The issue is up to the public. Our gigantic fire loss is a menace to prosperity, to home building, to industrial progress. It is a national disgrace that can be remedied only by unceasing vigilance in our homes and places of business.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS

The Bureau of Labor estimates that the total loss due to accidents still exceeds four billion dollars a year in this country.

Yet, the frequency and severity of our industrial accidents has been materially reduced in recent years. One great manufacutring concern, employing 70,000 men, reduced its accident rate by half in eight years of intensive work. Another achieved a 76 per cent reduction. Still another, with 5,000 employes, established the amazing record of operating 8,000,000 man-hours in 268 days without a single accident.

It has been the experience that safety and efficiency go hand in hand. The safe plant is the efficient plant and the efficient plant the safe one. As a result, the old idea that accident prevention work was of only social importance has largely disappeared. Modern employers know that they can not afford not to take the steps that will make their plants safe.

There is still another side to the industrial safety movement that is receiving intensive attention at present —health of workers. It is said that in plants with adequate health supervision the average annual death rate of 7.5 per thousand employees has been reduced to five per thousand. In the past, illness has caused an even greater industrial loss than accidents, and health promotion work is of direct financial benefit to all concerned.

Waste due to sickness and accident is still gigantic. But it is being steadily reduced in progressive American industries which are setting an example that might well be emulated throughout the world.

A PLEA FOR CHILDREN

It is becoming more and more a matter of common information that the health and general well-being of people depend to a great extent upon a proper diet. Not the diet prescribed by food faddists, but one based upon scientific research and common sense.

In this connection it is declared by home economists that insufficient attention is paid to the feeding of children, whose needs in this respect are deserving of more consideration than is given in many homes.

Everyone knows that milk is good for the growing child, but as many children object to plain milk, especially when it is forced upon them, it is recommended that it be offered in more palatable forms, which may be easily prepared in any home.

One suggestion is that in hot weather milk shakes made of milk, sugar and a cereal beverage will appeal to a child who may not relish plain milk. In colder weather the same beverage may be served hot.

It is also suggested that by this means the child may be prevented from becoming a tea or coffee addict at an age when these stimulants are positively injurious. In a few states campaigns have been begun by health authorities for the purpose of educating mothers concerning the evil effects of tea and coffee upon their children.

Another important recommendation is that children be encouraged to drink water freely between meals, as an aid in keeping the kidneys active and healthy, so as to eliminate impurities from the system.

These simple means recommended in the interest of the child's health are worthy of adoption by every mother.

"Are mine the only lips you ever kissed?"

GENERAL PERSHING IS 70

General John J. Pershing, 70 years old on August 13, has had perhaps the most remarkable career of any American soldier of his generation, and although retired from the Army since 1924, is still active as chairman of the American battle monuments commission.

Born in Linn county, Missouri, he was graduated from West Point in 1886, gaining his first actual battle experience the same year in the Apache Indian campaign. He served in the Sioux war of 1890-1891; in the Santiago campaign of 1898, and distinguished himself in successful campaigns against the Moros in the Philippines, for which he was promoted from captain to brigadier-general.

He commanded the expedition sent into Mexico in pursuit of Villa in 1916, and at the outbreak of the World War was placed in command of the American Expeditionary Forces in France. For his distinguished services in the war he was made General of the Armies of the United States, a rank created for him by Congress in 1919. He also received the highest military decorations from all the Allied nations.

General Pershing's life has been marked by many hardships and at least one great sorrow. His wife and three children were burned to death in a fire at the Presidio of San Francisco on August 27, 1915, while he was absent from the post on duty. Mrs. Pershing was the daughter of Senator Warren of Wyoming.

During his long career General Pershing has served his country with extraordinary distinction, and his fellow citiens will wish for him many more years in which to enjoy the well-earned honors which have been bestowed upon him.

CENTURY OF RAILROADS

The year 1930 marks the 100th anniversary of the first regularly operated steam railroad in the United States, the Baltimore and Ohio, which in 1830 was only 13 miles long. Other construction under way brought the total for the country to 23 miles in that year.

By 1840 the mileage had increased to 2,818 and extensions were made with increasing rapidity during the succeeding years. When the railroad was 50 years old, in 1880, the United States had 93,671 miles.

The ten years between 1880 and 1890 was the greatest period of railroad building. American roads built during that decade totalled 71,983 miles. The greatest railroad mileage was reached in 1916, when 254,251 miles were in operation.

Since 1916, owing to the abandonment of a number of unprofitable short lines, the mileage has been actually reduced, being now about 249,-300 miles. At present new construction is almost entirely limited to adding a second, third or even fourth track to existing lines.

One of the most striking developments in railroading has been the increase in the size of locomotives. From a weight of less than five tons 100 years ago, they have been built larger and larger until today many passenger locomotives weigh 150 tons or more, while those used in freight transportation range as high as 220 tons or more. A few of special types, exceed 400 tons.

With the growing completion of the automobile, truck and airplane, it is impossible to predict what the next century of railroading may bring forth. It is safe to predict, however, that for heavy freight transportation the railroad will hold first place many years to come.

AN ESKIMO IN GOTHAM

Abie Broomfield is the Anglicized name of a 45-year-old Eskimo dog driver, who has been enjoying his first visit to civilization as illustrated by New York and its environs. And he is getting many an eyeful.

Starting at the Woolworth building, Abie pronounced it a "big, big shack; bigger than Cape Mugford." Most of the sights he witnessed were observed in silence, but he was evidently thinking a lot, as he had never been in a settlement of more than 50 people before.

Being much like other sons of Adam, Abie was greatly interested in the New York girls. Asked how he liked them, he turned on a flow of Eskimo oratory lasting a full half-minute, which was interpreted to mean, "very fine." But he thought they were too thin, and suggested that they didn't get enough to eat. Asked how he woud like to have one of them for a wife, he said:

"You bet. Take her one year first and give her plenty fried pork. I fatten her up so she's dam fat, and good wife for best dog driver this side of North Pole."

Jack: "Why did you break with Alice? I thought you were crazy about her."

Jim: "I am, but I decided I couldn't stand it to live with her folks."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Her Father: "I doubt very much whether you would be able to support my daughter. I can hardly do it myself."

The Suitor (brightly): "Let's pool our resources."—Pearson's.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

G. Clifford Jones, editor of the Orange (N. J.) Daily Courier, says:

That you rarely buy anything that isn't advertised.

Perhaps you are a storekeeper yourself. Maybe you have reached the estate where storekeepers are called merchants. Possibly you are a business man in some other line. No matter.

Think over the things that you or members of your family purchase and check them as advertised or non-advertised goods. To make sure that you haven't missed too many things, go into the pantry at home and go through the closets and look about the house generally, and then about the garden and the garage. Take a look about your place of business. Note the various articles—desks, typewriters, show cases, scales, and the goods on your shelves, if you have any. Then check the list of advertised articles against those that are not, and see what the result is. You will be amazed at the fact that almost everything you buy is advertised in some manner.

The auto is, the radio is, the suit of clothes most likely was, the condensed milk was, the coffee was, the bathroom fixtures were, the piano was, the collar on your neck was, so were your underclothes. If they were not advertised in the great popular magazines or the newspapers, they were in trade papers that go direct to the alert tradesmen. If the papers or the magazines weren't used, the radio was, or the direct-by-mail method or some other means was resorted to. It may only have been a catalog.

Continued successful business lives by three things—Integrity, Ability, and Publicity—meaning advertising.

There is one way to test out the value of advertising without spending a cent. Prove to your own satisfaction the fact that successful business, large or small, sells itself first and then its products as a matter of course, with the consistent, persistent, intelligent use of advertising.

Stop and think it over!

HAD REACHED THE LIMIT

"You are charged," said the judge, "with beating up this government inspector. What have you to say?"

"Nothing," replied the grocer. "I am guilty. I lost my head. All morning I held my temper while government agents inspected my scales, tasted my butter, smelled my meat, and graded my kerosene. In addition, your honor, I had just answered three federal questionaires. Then this bird comes along and wants to take moving pictures of the cheese, so I pasted him in the eye."—Boston News Bureau.

$100,000 DAMAGE SUIT RESULT OF COLLISION

Two damage suits, totaling $100,000, have been filed in the Superior court as the aftermath of a street car and automobile crash near Colma, in which two men were killed.

Mrs. Floyd B. Owen, divorced wife of Lloyd Bacon, movie director and son of Frank Bacon, actor, of "Lightning" fame, and Mrs. Laura Owen seek $50,000 for the death of William C. Owen, 39, former manager of Sommer & Kaufmann's shoe store.

In the other suit, Mrs. Eva M. Hendry, Oregon City, Oregon, asks $50,000 for the death of her husband, U. Edwin Hendry, 52, a shoe buyer.

Defendants in the actions filed by J. Maxwell Peyser, attorney, are the Market Street Railway Company and W. F. Childs, motorman.

Mrs. Floyd Owen, who was driving the automoble, and her mother-in-law were both injured in the accident. They live at the old Bacon home, "Baconia," at Mountain View. The accident occurred October 4, last year.

VEGETABLES AND FRUITS MUST BE INSPECTED

All large consignments of fresh fruits and vegetables passing through San Mateo county to the San Francisco market will be forced to undergo rigid inspection from now on until the end of the season.

The State Department of Agriculture bureau of fruits and vegetable standardization has established a substation at San Carlos, where all trucks passing over the highway into San Francisco with fruit and vegetables are stopped and examined. Similar examinations are being made on Skyline boulevard and other arteries of travel into the city.

F. R. Whipple has been placed in charge of the San Carlos station and said that it would be necessary for all fruits and vegetables coming into San Francisco to meet with the required standards. If any shipment should not, it will be ordered back to its original source, he said.

In cases of flagrant violation, he added, an order will be obtained from the superior court and the produce confiscated.

WESTERN PACIFIC ASKS BONDS FOR EXTENSION

The Western Pacific railroad has applied to the interstate commerce commission for authority to issue $5,000,000 of first mortgage 5 per cent bonds as a means of financing the extension from Keddie to Bieber. Work on the new link started on August 16.

SAN MATEO COUNTY FLOWER FESTIVAL

The horticultural versatility of San Mateo county will be on parade at the San Mateo County Fall Flower Festival on October 24, 25 and 26. The large building and grounds of the San Mateo Junior High school will be given over entirely to the displays.

Not only the aristocratic chrysanthemum, queen of the autumn gardens of the peninsula, will be there, but the lowly carot and the burgeoise onion and all of the toher members of the floral, arboreal and vegetable clans that inhabit the fertile gardens and orchards of the peninsula.

The novelty of showing vegetables at a flower show should attract much attention, and fruits will not be neglected, for apples and pears are offered prizes also.

Among the flowers chosen for special awards are chrysanhemums, dhalias, roses, carnations, miscellaneous cut flowers, plants, fruits, and vegetables.

A real novelty will be a prize-winning class for the best collection of cut shrubs and trees, native of California, to be correctly named, in two classes for boys and girls. Young botanists of the penisula are already scouring the hillsides and staking out their collections.

It is predicted that the Fall Flower Festival will culminate a year of remarkable flower shows, and the committee in charge are determined that the last show shall be the most spectacular.

Co-operating with the committee are all the Chambers of Commerce in San Mateo county, the San Mateo County Fish and Game Protective Association, San Mateo Woman's Club, American Legion Auxiliary, Burlingame, Burlingame-San Mateo Kiwanis Club, Burlingame Woman's Club, Peninsula League of Women Voters, Burlingame Business and Professional Woman's Club, Burlingame-San Mateo 20-30 Club, Broadway Development Association, Redwood City Woman's Club, Redwood City Exchange Club, Menlo Park Horticultural Society.

SELLING TO FARMERS

Business men of the country spend 850 million dollars a year for advertising to reach city dwellers, but only thirty million in reaching the farmers, according to Samuel R. McKelvie of the Federal Farm Board.

He added that this disproportion in advertising efforts was all the more striking when it is considered that the farmers of the country have a normal purchasing power of ten billion dollars annually.

He might have gone further by stating that no class of prospective customers are more responsive to honest advertising than farmers and farmers' wives. Generally they take fewer newspapers and other periodicals than city dwellers and consequently read those they do take more thoroughly.

Merchants would do well to give more consideration to newspapers which reach the rural population.

GAS IN HOMES

Nearly 70 per cent of all the manufactured gas sold in the United States is used in homes. Here is one of the principal reasons why America is far ahead of the rest of the world in banishing the drudgery that was once an unavoidable part of domestic life. Gas ranges, central heating systems and refrigerators have given the modern home new standards of efficiency, cleanliness and economy.

A Formula for Success . . .

OPPORTUNITY for success today is greater than ever before. The requirements to attain success, however, are more severe than they have been in the past. One of the fundamental requirements of success at the present time is knowledge—education.

There may, of course, be exceptions to the rule, but a careful analysis of the lives of hundreds of successful men and women show that during their life time over 95% have secured an education—have acquired superior knowledge. They may not have enjoyed the advantages of a college education, they may not even have enjoyed the privilege of attending school, but they have overcome these obstacles and acquired knowledge—they have educated themselves.

Most of our knowledge and education depends on reading. Whenever we leave our school or college, our education stops if we do not read. The educated person is the person who has simply kept up his reading.

People who feel they have no time to read are hampering their own opportunity to achieve a successful life. You can't afford not to read. A few minutes a day applied to good reading will enable any man or woman to acquire a very liberal education.

Among things to read, books come first. Nonfiction, biography and history especially, although good fiction has its place in a well ordered reading program. And the better the book, the better the reading.

Every home should have its books. The kind of books found in the home determine the cultural standard of the family, for as a man reads, so does he think. The books one reads become part of one's life. See that your children are provided with and read good books.

Magazines rank next to books for reading. They contain the best in contemporary literature, they are educational and inspirational. Become a magazine reader.

No program of reading could be complete that did not include the newspaper. No man or woman can keep abreast with current progress —local, national and international—who neglects the newspaper.

Supplementing the collection of books in the home should be always the public library. No community should be without some kind of a public library. Its cards should be in every home. There should be one book upon its shelves for each inhabitant, and two children's books for each child in grade school. In addition, it should house the leading reference works and supply its readers with the best in the magazine world; should be centrally located, and, if necessary, operate branch libraries to handle the total needs of the community. Remember, the circulation of public library books is one of the acid tests used to determine the community standard.

Make reading a part of your recreation. Reading means knowledge. Knowledge plus application means success. Let us make a "reading community" of

THE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL

Beginning on February 22, 1932, and continuing until Thanksgiving day of the same year, there will be observed throughout the United States a commemoration of the two hundreth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. The celebration is sponsored by the United States government, and Congress has created a commission charged with the responsibility of formulating and putting into operation plans for the event.

The program now being prepared by the associated directors is intended to provide for the participation of every man, woman and child in the Unted States. The celebration will extend to every village, town and hamlet in the country. It is to be nation-wide in scope—the most far-flung and all-inclusive observance ever undertaken in America.

In order to prevent a geographic concentration of the program, there will be no exposition. The commission wishes to exclude all such material phases. There will be no great demonstration of the progress of America in a material sense, although a realization of the things for which Washington strived will serve to emphasize in the minds of all the untold blessings which are enjoyed by his countrymen today. Instead of an assembling of the evidences of wealth and prosperity, there is to be an emphasis upon the spiritual—an appreciative reawakening in the hearts of all the people of the character and the life of America's greatest citizen.

The school children of America will have an important part in the celebration according to the program now being effected. It is planned to more thoroughly familiarize these boys and girls with the life and character of George Washington. For this reason a great deal of information is now being gathered and carefully checked for absolute historical accuracy. This material will very likely be placed before the thirty million school children in the United States in the form of programs, pageants and plays to be given on dates of great historical interest. In this way the children will be impressed with the significance of Washington's winter quarters at Valley Forge, the battles of Trenton and Yorktown and many other places in which Washington showed his heroism and loyalty to the cause of America. His boyhood days, when he learned the lessons which were later to prove so valuable to him; the respect he always had for his mother and her teachings; in fact, the example of obedience to authority which characterized his entire life—all these things will be pointed out and stressed.

Each school house in the country will be presented with a portrait of Washington, and it is expected that the American flag will fly from these buildings during the entire span of the celebration in 1932.

Educational bodies throughout the country are enthusiastic supporters of the plans of the commission. Many of them are proposing to hold national conclaves during the year 1932 in which George Washington and his many contributions to his country will be the main theme of their deliberations.

125 miles away a scaffold collapsed

A LONG DISTANCE operator at San Francisco was handling a call to Oroville. Suddenly someone in Oroville seized the receiver and an excited voice asked for an ambulance.

A building scaffold had collapsed. The operator at San Francisco immediately connected another line to Oroville and directed an ambulance to the scene.

The quick attentiveness of this operator brought prompt aid to an injured workman, 125 miles away.

CHOOSING A TRADE

Selecting a trade or occupation today is a rather more serious matter than in years gone by, owing to the rapid changes in methods of manufacture and in the products demanded by the public.

In hardly any line of manufacture does one know how soon some new method or process may render all his present skill useless as a means of gaining a livelihood. Highly skilled hand craftsmen in many lines are continually being replaced by machinery, while products which were formerly in great demand are rapidly becoming obsolete, such as the buggy and other horse-drawn vehicles.

Speaking from the manufacturer's standpoint, E. W. McCullough of the United States Chamber of Commerce recently said: "I could enumerate a hundred lines of business this evolution has wiped out, and lines without number have changed in materials, construction and form."

These changes have affected the individual workmen, as well as their employers, and never were changes made so rapidly as at present. Those who enter the mechanical trades today must be prepared to adapt themselves to new conditions as they arise.

Miss Ruth Barron of Los Angeles is the 17th woman in the United States to receive a transport airplane pilot's license. She is 20 years old and took up flying only six months ago.

Miss Haria Rizzati, former laundry girl of Rome, Italy, has just married Prince Danioni, one of the country's wealthiest noblemen, who first met her when he called at the laundry to compliment the management on the way his shirts had been ironed.

Miss Margaret Stoughton of Osage, Iowa, is the first woman to be appointed a junior forester by the goverment, and is stationed at the Appalachian forest station in Asheville, N. C.

Miss Anna Kinsolving, newspaper reporter of Baltimore, has become engaged to John Nicholas Brown, known as "the world's bachelor," whose fortune is estimated at several hundred million dollars.

BRIGHT-COLORED CLOTHING AID TO SAFETY IN TRAFFIC

The selection of bright colors in children's clothing, aside from being popular with the youngsters, is becoming recognized as a definite contribution to the protection of the child from traffic accidents, according to the public safety department of the California State Automobile Association.

The motorists' organization pointed out that vision is largely a matter of contrasts and that the child who is attired in brightly colored garments attracts the eye at a greater distance than one dressed in less vivid hues.

"Manufacturers of children's clothing," says the statement, "have long favored a riot of colors in 'what the well dressed child should wear,' and this naturally fits well into the program. Everyone knows that a bather in a bright colored suit can be seen for a greater distance out in the water than one in a bathing suit that offers no contrast to he water. The same situation is true on the highways.

"Although children should be taught to remain out of the arteries of vehicular travel, those dressed in bright colors have a better chance to escape accidents through being seen farther by approaching drivers.

"While colors are particularly helpful in the program of reducing accidents to children, the same principle applies to adults. A pedestrian attired in clothing of bright hue will be seen when crossing a street quicker than one in a drab outfit."

P. G. &. E. STOCKHOLDERS WOULD FILL HUGE STADIUM

The Pacific Gas and Electric Company now has 88,457 stockholders. That includes the 21,955 recently acquired with the Great Western Power Company and the San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation.

If these stockholders were all called together in one meeting they would fill the Stanford Stadium. Put them in one city and it would be larger than Berkeley, almost as large as Sacramento.

"Owned, operated and managed by Californians" is just as true as ever, for 54,274 of the 66,502 P. G. & E. stockholders (81.6 per cent) live in California. The same is true of the Great Western and the San Joaquin—94 per cent of their 21,955 stockholders also make this state their home.

Women still predominate. There are 27,004 now where there were only 900 in 1914. Of men, there are 26,604; then come 10,925 joint tenants (husband and wife, usually), and 1,907 corporations, associations and institutions.

Employees, 3,554 of them, own stock of the par value of $4,287,000 and of a market value much greater.

New stockholders come in daily. During the year ending June 30, a total of 6,615 subscribed for the new 5½ per cent preferred, making an investment of $6,776,000.

Aviators are not the only ones who are making records these days. Frisco engine No. 4213 recently finished an endurance run, covering 9,700 miles, in 30 days, without overhauling or cleaning up. At the finish it is said that the engine was working perfectly and could have continued indefinitely, but for the fact that government regulations forbid a locomotive to be run longer than 30 days between inspections.

SPLINTERS

From the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard

VOLUME 4 FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1930 NUMBER 8

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

"Drive On!" He Said

"Here, boy!" said the pompous motorist, "I want some gasoline and please get a move on. You'll never get anywhere in the world unless you push. Push is essential. When I was young I pushed, and that got me where I am."

"Well, guv'nor," replied the boy, "I reckon maybe you'll have to push again, 'cause we haven't got a drop of gas in the place."

Paint your house! We can supply the Paint.

Home is a place where a man can do as he chooses, provided what he chooses is agreeable with what his wife wants done.

Just a Little

A little house, a little yard,
A little garden fair,
A little brook goes singing by
And flowers everywhere.
A little heaven here on earth,
Where we may work and play,
A little love pervading all
To cheer us on our way.

Doctor: "What your husband needs, Mrs. Naggett, is a complete rest. I have prescribed a sleeping draught."

Mrs. Naggett: "And when shall I give it to him?"

Doctor: "Don't give it to him at all. Take it yourself."

Taking No Chances

"Why the shinguards, old man?"

"I'm going to play bridge with the wife."

"I believe," said the impatient man, as he put aside the telephone, "that I'll go fishing."

"Didn't know you cared for fishing."

"I don't—but it's the only chance I have of finding myself at the end of a line that isn't busy."

Bitter is someone's cup,
For the price of Coal went up.
Yet amidst their grief and sorrow,
They'll still wait until tomorrow.

"Won't you say something soft and sweet?"

"Apple-sauce!"
